Flagship Detroit DC-3 Gets American Airlines Refurbishment

It was in the mid-1930s that American Airlines and its DC-3 began showing the world that flying commercial passengers could be a viable industry. Jim Gentry, an American mechanic in Tulsa, is among those who volunteered his nights and weekends during the last month to perform work on the Flagship Detroit at Tulsa International Airport. This is the oldest flying DC-3 in the world, he said Thursday at an American maintenance hangar housing the gleaming plane. It's really something to work on. The Flagship Detroit, one of American's earliest DC-3s, was built in 1937. The Flagship Detroit has been flying continuously since 1937, when American took delivery of the once next-generation aircraft. The DC-3 made American a player in the aviation industry when commercial flying wasn't economically feasible.

Delta Invades United Hub with Newark-Paris Service

Delta apparently isn't content to stay on its side of the Hudson. Delta on Saturday began Newark-Paris Charles DeGaulle service, aboard a Boeing 767-300ER. In general, airlines avoid one another's hubs, although Newark is a special case because it is not only a hub for United but also a leading international gateway airport. With the Paris flight, Delta will offer 28 daily departures from Newark, including an international flight to Amsterdam and 11 daily flights to Atlanta, as well as flights to four other domestic hubs. United has about 400 daily Newark departures including two daily Paris flights. Delta's SkyTeam partner Air France previously flew Newark-Paris, but dropped the route in March 2012.

Airlines Agree on Plan to Offset Emissions

Global airlines have agreed on a proposal for tackling aircraft emissions in a bid to break international deadlock over an issue that has stoked fears of a carbon trade war. Airlines representing 85 percent of global traffic urged governments to adopt a single market-based system designed to offset growth in their post-2020 emissions against the funding of projects to cut emissions deemed harmful to the environment. The decision is designed to offer governments a basis for negotiation after United Nations talks failed to resolve a stand-off between the European Union and a broad flank of other countries over an issue with cross-border implications. Airlines have been racing to avert a trade war after the European Union suspended an emissions trading scheme for a year to give opponents time to agree on a global system.

Merger Q&A

Q. Does the merger impact American's fleet acquisition and fleet retirement plan?

A. American is building toward a more modern fleet, and will continue to do so as we come together with US Airways. American currently has more than 500 new planes scheduled to join the fleet, including continued deliveries of the Boeing 737 family of aircraft and new additions such as the Boeing 777-300ER, the Boeing 787 family of aircraft and the Airbus A320 family of aircraft.
